18 CHILDREN KILLED IN SCHOOL FIRE

BEARING BODIES OF VICTIMS FROM BURNING SCHOOL

FEAR DEATH LIST WILL GROW

While hundreds of little boys and girls were at their morning prayers in St. John's Parochial School at Peabody, a fire started in the basement and, aided by an explosion, spread throughout the first floor with such cruel rapidity that within fifteen minutes all escape by the doors and windows of the first floor was completely cut off.

So far as the results of the fire can thus far be stated they are:

Eighteen known dead.

Nine known injured (two near death).

Twenty-three known missing.

The school destroyed.

The loss, police estimate, $150,000.

The known dead are all little children, their bodies ranged in a pitiful row at the Conway undertaking establishment at Peabody.

STATE POLICE BEGIN INQUIRY.

The cause of the fire cannot be stated. It is a mystery, and there was in the strange rapidity with which it spread something unexplained.

The State Police began an immediate investigation. That the fire was started by a boiler explosion was the

VERY LATEST NEWS

POLICE BELIEVE DEATH LIST WILL REACH 21

Attempts to identify the bodies of the victims of the Peabody school fire began late today. Medical Examiner Horace G. Foster prepared such bodies as bore any identifying marks for examination by relatives of the missing.

Fillings in teeth, rings on little fingers or fragments of shoes and clothing served as the only clews in most cases. The police said not more than three of the eighteen bodies could be identified. They set the probable total deaths at 21.

An explosion of gas or of chemicals, it is now thought, may have started the fire or spread it after its origin in a closet in the basement.

NEW CONFESSIONS IN BOMB PLOT

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—Despite official German denials, United States secret service men are more confident than ever of their ability to prove Lieutenant Robert Fay, who with four others is held in the alleged conspiracy to blow up ships carrying munitions for the allies, was an emissary sent here by representatives of the German government.

This confidence is the result of a new confession by Fay, made and signed in the presence of United States Secret Service men and United States District Attorney Marshall, to which Fay repeats his assertion that he was sent here by the German Secret Service and also indicates a connection, indirect, from the evidence now at hand, between Dr. Bernhard Kienzle, another of the accused in the conspiracy charge, and the German Secret Service.

Fay had already admitted that he had been provided with $4,000 by one Jansen, a district head of the German secret agents. His confession yesterday gave new details of this and also showed how the connection between Fay and Kienzle became established.

GAVE LISTS OF SHIPS.

Early last Spring, before Fay set out from the other side, Dr. Kienzle, then living in New York, wrote a letter to his father, Herbert Kienzle, who is head of the Black Forest Clock Company of Schwenningen, in Wuertemberg—the largest clock-making firm in the world. With his letter he enclosed a number of newspaper clippings showing the sailing of ships from New York, giving data with munitions for the allies' destroy. Kienzle's father, in turn, also sent the clippings to the director of the Secret Service and also indicated a connection. FRENCH CABINET RESIGNS; BRIAND SUCCEEDS VIVIANI

By CHARLES F. BERTELLI.
Special Correspondent of the International News Service.

PARIS, Oct. 28.—Premier Viviani of France resigned today, and his resignation was followed by the collapse of the entire Cabinet.

Aristide Briand, a Socialist, was offered the premiership by President Poincare and immediately took steps to form a new ministry.

The resignation of Premier Viviani is attributed to the Balkan crisis. His was the second retirement from the Cabinet for the same reason, the first being that of Foreign Minister Theophile Delcasse, who resigned on October 14.

M. Briand offered the portfolio of Minister of War to General Galliени, Military Governor of Paris.

Deputy Paul Painleve, president of the marine committee of the Chamber of Deputies, and M. de Freycinet Leon Bourgeois and Emile Combes were summoned by M. Briand and offered places in the new government.

M. Combes, who was formerly Premier of France, accepted a place in the government, but he will be without any definite portfolio.

The post of Minister of Marine was offered to M. Lacaza.

According to official circles, M. Viviani resigned rather than reorganize the government.

Consternation was caused in French political circles by the resignation of the Premier. It was outward evidence of dissensions in the French government over affairs in the Near East, similar to those which have been prevailing in the British Cabinet.

The opposition is criticising the government for allowing the Teutonic powers to gain such ascendency in the Near East and to launch military operations on a grand scale when they might have been prevented.

French diplomacy is under fire as well as the military policy of the government.

The Viviani ministry was formed on August 26, 1914, shortly after the outbreak of the war. Previous to the formation of that government, M. Viviani had headed a previous Cabinet. M. Viviani has been prominent in French politics for many years and was formerly Minister of Instruction. He is fifty-three years old and is a native of Algiers.

A citizen of the world.

It went with Peary to the north pole, packed as a necessity along with the pemmican.

It moves in the best circles — including the arctic.

Rameses.

They call it "The Aristocrat of Cigarettes," and it travels with real men, in snow hut or bamboo shack, by land or sea.

There must be something very different about Rameses which makes men of discrimination and experience select it with critical care, smoke it with constant satisfaction, and recommend it as an act of real friendship.

All over the world "Nobody ever changes from Rameses".

WE WANT OUR OWN PEACE IN OWN TIME, DECLARES HANOTAUX

By GABRIEL HANOTAUX,
The Famous French Diplomat and Historian.

PARIS, Oct. 28.—The moment is long overdue when the tone and methods of the allies' diplomacy must be radically changed. The world must be brought to realize that the central empires are asking us to make peace, and we are refusing it because we want our own peace in our own time.

If the world knew all we know, if it realized all we can do, our diplomats would no longer be confronted with disdainful suspicion and the chilling looks of the marble or wooden faces that surround us.

The day of good intentions and flabby negation is done. Henceforth we must have statesmen worthy of France at the head. If intrigue, pusillanimity and powerlessness deprive the country of strong rulers the country will know how to act to obtain them.

While our army has done magnificently and is the admiration of the world, our diplomacy, weighed by the hesitations of our allies, has faltered in the wake of events.

It has lacked foresight, initiative and ideas.

Even working defensively it has obtained no results. For instance, what has it obtained from the United States, Spain, Holland or Sweden?

It has failed to foresee the intentions of Turkey, Bulgaria, Greece and Rumania.

It allowed Venizelos to be twice dismissed. It failed to obtain closer co-operation from Japan and Italy. Its propaganda has been non-existent or ineffective. It has discouraged all friendly advances. It has obtained only a sterile crop of checks.

While from a military viewpoint things have been going better daily, they have been going continually worse diplomatically. Such are the facts.

The duty of the new Foreign Minister is to unite the allied powers in a powerful organization for strong, decisive, quick action on all questions affecting the allies' interests.

TWO AUSTRIAN FORTS TAKEN BY ITALIANS

ROME, Oct. 28.—The capture of two Austrian mountain forts and some trenches was officially announced by the Italian War Office today. North of Hoverete Italian artillery set fire to an Austrian military train. On the Isonzo front the Italians' offensive has resulted in further gains.

The text of the official report follows:

"Our artillery from our new positions on the right bank of the Adige river, between Hoverete and Trent, bombarded and set on fire a train of Austrian stores.

"In the upper Cordeba valley we captured an Austrian fortress. At Cadilana we took trenches which were found to be filled with dead. Eight unwounded prisoners were taken.

"On the night of the 26th, in the Monte Nero zone, the enemy delivered strong attacks against our positions on the Vodil. We allowed the Austrians to approach close to our lines and then mowed them down with our cross-fire.

"Our offensive movement in the sector of Santa Lucia hill on the Tolmin (Volmien) front has gained us further progress. We took twenty-one prisoners.

"In the Plava zone we captured an Austrian fort southeast of Gloina, where we took 102 prisoners, including four officers.

"We also captured some machine guns.

"On the Carso plateau (the Isonzo front) there was a terrific artillery duel throughout the day."

TURKS LAND BIG FORCE TO AID BULGARIANS

LONDON, Oct. 28.—A Central News dispatch from Zurich says that 70,000 Turkish soldiers have arrived at the Bulgarian port of Dedeagatch.

By PERCY THOMAS,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Austro-German and Bulgarian forces in northern Serbia have smashed their way to fresh victories, but news from southern Serbia is more hopeful for the allies.

The Bulgarians are reported to have been driven out of the important railway town of Uskub, but in the north the Serbs are slowly falling back upon their mountain strongholds before the advance of the Teutons.

British troops have at last reached Serbian soil and are taking part in the fierce fighting along the Salonica-Nish railway, it was reported from Saloniea.

The junction of the Austro-German and Bulgarian armies in northeastern Serbia gives the Teutonic allies a semi-circular battle line nearly 300 miles long, from the Drina river to a point near Strumnitza.

Following the capture of Knajevatz and the storming of Drina, the Bulgarians have advanced upon Pirot in force and the fortress is reported to be surrounded. It guards the Sofia-Nish railroad.

It is reported from Bucharest that war demonstrations are taking place there. Deputy Blesco of the Roumanian chamber has published a violent broadside against Premier Bratiano of Roumania, threatening him with death if Roumania does not go to war in behalf of Serbia.

Greece is now between two fires. The Bulgarian government has sent word to Athens that, if the Anglo-French and Serb forces in southern Serbia are driven over the frontier into Greece, the Bulgarians will not respect Greek neutrality, but will pursue the allied forces.

Agents of the Department of Justice are searching in St. Louis, Cincinnati, Milwaukee and other German centers.

Lull in Fighting on the Western Front

By International News Service.

PARIS, Oct. 28.—A lull has fallen upon the battle front in the western theatre of war, according to the following brief communique issued by the French War Office today:

"During the night there were only engagements of patrols and unimportant reconnaissances, which were to our advantage everywhere."

Yankee Rhodes Scholars Win Belgian Girls

OXFORD, Eng., Oct. 28.—A rather unexpected result of the work of American Rhodes scholars in Belgium and their role of heroes in Belgian eyes has been the announcement of a number of engagements to Belgian girls. C. H. Carstairs of Philadelphia and London will shortly marry a girl living near Mons. T. R. Kittredge, who now is teaching history in the University of California, will return next Summer and marry a girl of the Province of Limburg whom he met when bringing into Limburg the first cargo of American food to reach that part of Belgium.

POPE LOOKS TO U. S. TO WORK FOR PEACE

BERLIN, Oct. 28.—Herr Matthias Erzberger, Parliamentary leader of the German Catholics, in an exclusive interview today told me he believed Pope Benedict XV. was doing his best to bring about peace. He said:

"When I saw his Holiness last he was quite sanguine regarding the outcome of his labors to bring about peace. I know this from personal conversation with the Pope. I know, too, the Pope always expected and still expects cordial co-operation by the American people and the American government when the practical, opportune moment arrives for the opening of peace negotiations.

"His Holiness, who has always been an enthusiastic advocate of peace, is untiring in his sincere and non-partisan efforts to terminate the conflict from which so many of his flock are suffering.

"The American note, which is about to be delivered to England, will help to induce Great Britain to be more inclined to entertain peace propositions, especially if the note is as strong as I myself expect it will be—for there must be some sentiment left in England against the losing of American friendship."

Thin Folks Who Would Increase Weight

SIMPLE DIRECTIONS EASY TO FOLLOW

Thin men and women — that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

If every way you've tried to put on weight has failed try these simple directions. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of those a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note your weight. Sargol does not of itself add fat, but mixing with your food its purpose is to help the digestive organs turn the fats, sugars and starches of what you've eaten into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepare it in an easily assimilated form which the blood can readily accept. A great deal of this nourishment now passes from your bodies in waste. Sargol is designed to stop the waste and make the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is non-injurious, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. All leading druggists are authorized to sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

PLAN PLEA TO WALSH FOR STRIKE END

The attitude of the three railroads towards the striking freight handlers has been condemned by the Teamsters' Joint Council of Boston, representing 12,000 members. A committee, representing this organization, will appeal to Governor Walsh and Mayor Curley to exert every influence with the railroads for a settlement of the strike in order "to prevent any unnecessary trouble."

This action shows that the teamsters will back up the freight handlers, should their efforts to arbitrate with the railroads be unsuccessful, and a general strike of the various transportation unions is threatened.

The committee, which will appeal to Governor and Mayor, comprises Michael O'Donnell of the truck teamsters, Eugene Meahegan of the market teamsters and Abraham Pearlstein, president of the union.

This committee will act with the Central Labor Union committee at the conference tomorrow morning.

They have been instructed to inform the Mayor and Governor how serious the situation might become, if the railroads refuse to arbitrate with the strikers.

None of the teamsters' officials would define what "unnecessary trouble" meant. But it is understood that the council debated the freight handlers' trouble pro and con and decided that their powerful organizations of teamsters will stand solidly behind the railroad workers.

A temporary truce in any proposed general strike has been pledged by a committee from the Boston Central Labor Union. The committee gave Federal Conciliator James H. Smyth, who arrived from Washington a few hours before, until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning in which to present the government's appeal for arbitration to officials of the New Haven, Boston & Maine and Boston & Albany Railroads.

The United States commissioner attended a conference arranged by Mayor Curley at City Hall. The 150 freight handlers on strike at the various railroad yards in this city were represented by the Boston Central Labor Union committee. None of the railroads was represented, although letters were received from their officials.

To further emphasize the importance of this declaration, in pursuance of our policy of keeping faith with the purchasing public, We Offer 4 Specials of Commanding Value at Minimum Prices.

2,000 MORE MEN IN WORCESTER JOIN STRIKE

WORCESTER, Oct. 28.—Two thousand employes of the Worcester Crompton & Knowles loom works walked out on strike at 10 o'clock today, in accordance with an announcement made last week by labor leader Joseph H. Gilman.

The army of machinists laid down their tools exactly at 10 o'clock and marched out of the shop and through the streets, carrying banners announcing the strikers' demands. A brass band added life to the long procession.

The workmen ask for an eight-hour day, a five-cent an hour raise, time and a half for overtime, and double pay for Sundays and holidays.

The officials of the company will make no statement until it is ascertained how many employes are left in the shops. The strikers claim that only 100 remained at work, including bosses and foremen.

This walkout brings the number of machinists in Worcester on strike up to 4,000, with 5,000 still employed.

Strike Breaker Is Fined for Stealing

In the South Boston Court today, Philip Trugeon of New Bedford, one of the men imported to take the places of the striking freight handlers, who was arrested last evening charged with stealing a pair of shoes from the New Haven road, pleaded guilty and was fined $5. Charles F. Wigley, an outside teamster, pleaded guilty to stealing a tub of butter from the same road and was fined $10.

SAVE YOUR HAIR! 25-CENT BOTTLE STOPS DANDRUFF

Every bit of dandruff disappears and hair stops coming out.

Try this. Your hair appears glossy, abundant, wavy and beautiful.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and after the first application your hair will take on that lifeless, colorless appearance which is so fluffy, and have the appearance of abundance, an incomparable gloss and softness; but what will please you most will be after just a few weeks' use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair growing all over the scalp.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its exhilarating and life-producing property cause the hair to grow long, strong and beautiful. For sale by Riker-Jaynes and all reliable druggists.—Advertisement.

Why Suffer From Migraine or Sick Headache?

USE ANTI-KAMNIA TABLETS

Dr. J. J. Caldwell says that this exceedingly distressing disease does not shorten life, but does not appear to be curable. Sufferers from this affliction are recommended to undergo the periodical attacks every few weeks until they are forty years of age, after which the attacks become less frequent, and finally disappear entirely. Palliative measures during the attack are all that it is possible to suggest, while care in the diet is the best preventive measure. An attack may often be prevented by taking two Anti-kamnia Tablets when the first symptoms appear, and one Anti-kamnia Tablet every two hours during the attack shortens it, eases the pain and brings rest and relief.

Anti-kamnia may be obtained at all druggists. Ask for A-K Tablets. They quickly relieve all pain.

First of all this new "Kitchen Maid" cabinet is white enameled—not only on the inside, but on the outside as well—all over, in fact.

It stands six feet in height, and is exactly as pictured, with nickeled fittings, and top of nickeloid. As shown in the illustration it has an elevated flour-bin and sifter that does away with scooping; glass sugar jar, cake box, and the series of spice jars that is shown above.

Not only is this cabinet strongly built, and the last word in kitchen convenience, but it is good to look at as well, giving to the kitchen a look of cleanliness and beauty that has never before been possible. It requires only a damp cloth to make it look like new. On Sale Friday at 8 A.M.

A LITTLE JOKER

By HOWARD NOBLE

NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION, as proposed by the Anti-Saloon League, is as full of holes as a sieve. It prohibits "the sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale and exportation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes," investing Congress with the power to enforce the article by all needful legislation.

It does NOT prohibit the manufacture, importation or transportation of liquor for personal use. Mr. Hobson, author of this proposed amendment to the Constitution, frankly states that each citizen would have the right to manufacture and use in his own home all the alcoholic beverages desired. How would such a scheme of prohibition work out? The answer depends largely upon whether the "home manufacture" of liquors is easy or difficult, inexpensive or costly.

Cheap and Easy

A ten-gallon pot still costs about $5.00. To make rum, mix one gallon of molasses and six gallons of water; add yeast cake; let it ferment three days. Place still on kitchen range and let the mixture boil. In two hours you will have two quarts of rum. Cost: "Blackstrap" molasses, 12 cents; yeast, two cents; total cost, 14 cents for two quarts, or 28 cents a gallon. Any other form of distilled liquor may be as easily made. Applejack is made by distilling cider. To make peach brandy, squeeze juice out of fruit, add water, a little sugar and yeast. Wines are readily made from grapes, raspberries, elderberries, currants, oranges and other fruits, and the making of home-brewed ale is by no means a lost art. The process with whiskey is similar to that of rum, only grains and malt are used instead of molasses.

Thus, crude alcoholic beverages, particularly distilled products, are easily and cheaply made. Federal laws today, however, impose heavy penalties for operating unregistered stills in the home or out of it; and these drastic laws prevent illegal distilling, except in sections of the prohibition South.

The Flood of Moonshine

It is generally conceded that raw distilled liquors are deleterious to the human system, aging in wood being required to render them digestible. Federal laws, therefore, not only keep the manufacture of liquor out of the home, but also prevent widespread consumption of a harmful product. Under national prohibition the Internal Revenue Department would have no supervision over the manufacture of liquors, because officially that industry would cease. As Mr. Hobson has suggested, it would be transferred to the home.

There is no danger that the majority of American homes would set up family stills. Such a claim would be absurd, and nobody makes it. There is grave danger, however—indeed, there is absolute certainty—that moonshine liquor enough would be distilled to flood the country. No longer compelled to pay the Internal Revenue tax of $1.10 per gallon, the traffic would be immensely profitable, and no enforcement efforts could stop it. The Government would be hopelessly handicapped at the start in having to admit the right of everybody to manufacture and at the same time be forced to prove, in special cases, the intent to sell. Convictions, except where the offenders were caught in the act of selling, would be well-nigh impossible.

This country last year produced more than 124,000,000 gallons of distilled and 59,746,124 barrels of malt liquors. The national thirst indicated by these figures cannot be allayed by prohibition laws. Under present conditions liquors are lawfully made and sold, and are drunk in the open. Under prohibition of the Hobson type they would be unlawfully made and sold, and drunk in hidden places. Those two words "for sale" in the Hobson resolution constitute the little joker, and they spell the difference between order and lawlessness.

"Beer is a kindly beverage, invented, one might fancy, to smooth away the cares of life and the workaday world, satisfying at once the spirit and the man.—"Henry Watterson.

GIRL'S FATHER ASKS ARREST OF THUG

As a result of attacks by thugs and robbers upon six women and girls in the last few days, the police of suburban Boston were today exercising unusual vigilance.

There have been three attacks in Somerville, one in Hyde Park, one in Wakefield, and the latest occurred in Roxbury, where a $50 reward has been offered for the attacker.

The first of the series of attacks occurred in Wakefield, where fourteen-year-old Hazel D. Godfrey, of No. 762 Nahant street, was seized by a man who approached her while she was returning from school. Her screams frightened the man, her struggles discouraged him, and he fled into the woods.

Mabel Chaplin, of No. 91 Thurston street, Somerville, was robbed. A man rose from behind a stone wall, pressed a revolver to her head, and demanded her money. She had $7 in her purse, but was cool enough to pass the man only two $1 bills, and he allowed her to go.

Mrs. Alice Whittaker, of No. 313 Josephine avenue, Somerville, was an earlier victim. Her handbag was snatched at the corner of Lexington and Lesley avenues.

Mildred H. Thompson, of No. 17½ Vinal avenue, Somerville, was held up at revolver point by a man who demanded her money. She screamed and he ran.

Mrs. Emma Madson, of No. 37 Eldridge street, Jamaica Plain, was on her way through Dale street, Hyde Park, to take a car, when a man attacked her and forced her to give up her handbag, containing $9.20. She was on her way to pay her taxes with the money.

Nineteen-year-old Alice Minutti, of No. 13 Sherwood street, Roxbury, was on her way home at 1 o'clock this morning, when a thug struck her, blacking her eye. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pasquol Minutti. Mr. Minutti said today:

"I will pay fifty dollars to anyone through whose help I succeed in running down the man who attacked Alice."

The girl describes her assailant as about 30, five feet, seven inches tall, and of dark complexion. He wore a dark suit and black hat.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES

A Vivid Narrative of Perilous Search for Ancient Treasures in the Land of One-Eyed Twala, King of the Kukuanas, by H. Rider Haggard, in Five Instalments

SYNOPSIS OF THE OPENING INSTALMENT.

Allan Quatermain, an African hunter and trader, who tells the story, has agreed to guide Sir Henry Curtis, a rich Englishman, and Captain John Good, a retired officer of the royal navy, into the heart of Africa in search of George Neville, Sir Henry Curtis' brother, and also of the fabled King Solomon's diamond mines. Neville had started for the mines a year before.

Quatermain has a map drawn three hundred years ago by Jose da Silvestra, a Portuguese explorer, in his own blood on the tail of his shirt as he lay dying in a cave on Sheba's Breast, one of twin mountains that mark the entrance to the country of King Solomon's Mines.

Da Silvestra also left a document saying that he saw the diamonds, but was betrayed by Gagool, the old witch-doctor of the native Kukuanas. Da Silvestra's servant had brought the writing and rude map back to Portugal. One of Da Silvestra's descendants, ten years before the story opens, tried the route, returned dying and gave the documents to Quatermain.

Accompanying the three Englishmen is a mysterious but dignified Zulu servant, who calls himself Umbopa.

They find the original Da Silvestra's body frozen in a cave on one of Sheba's Breasts. Pushing on, they come into a fair country. After a meal Captain Good kneels by a stream washing. A spear whizzes by his head. They all look up to see a group of hostile natives nearby.

CHAPTER IV.
The Kukuanas.

AN older native stepped forward and caught the spear-throwing youth by the arm. Then they advanced upon us. We lifted our rifles. They came on as though they did not know what rifles were.

"Greeting!" I said in Zulu. "Lo! I, the Bringer of Peace, the elderly man replied in a Zulu dialect. "Whence come ye? What are ye? Ye be clothed in white, but the fourth a fair one." He pointed to Umbopa. It occurred to me that he was right. Umbopa resembled them.

"We are strangers, and we come in peace."

"Ye lie," he replied. "No stranger may live in the land of the Kukuanas. Prepare to die, oh ye strangers."

"What does he say?" asked Good of me.

"He says we are going to be scragged."

"Oh, Lord!" ejaculated Good. Then, as his wig began to wag with perplexed, Good put his hand to his false teeth, dropped the lot down and allowed them to fly back in place with a snap.

It was a fortunate move. The savages darted back. Sir Henry yelled to Good: "It's your teeth, not your head. Take them out." Good did so, slipping the set into his flannel sleeve. The elderly native asked: "How is it that the teeth move of themselves, this man whose body is clothed, whose legs are bare, who has one shining and one transparent eye and who grows hair only on one side of his face?"

In my excitement I had forgotten about Good's eyeglass, his bald shaved face and the fact that he had taken off and folded up his trousers, leaving his legs bare.

Good curled up his lips and showed bare gums. The savages gasped. Then, with a smile of contempt, Good went his hand across his mouth and showed a row of ivories. The savages bowed in terror. Then I said: "We come from the biggest star that shines at night, and that young man pointing to the spear-throwers tried to kill us."

Then I had Umbopa bring me a rifle, with which I shot and killed a antelope seventy yards off. That settled the natives. The elderly one said: "The witchcraft of our people is not like this. Listen, good people. I am Infadoos, son of Inda, once king of the Kukuanas. This youth is Scragga—"

"He nearly scragged me," put in Good.

"Scragga," the native went on, "son of Twala, the present King, Twala of the Kukuanas, keeper of the great road, terror of his enemies, Twala, the One-Eyed, the Black, the Terrible."

"Lead us to Twala!" I said haughtily. They gave us the royal Zulu salute of "Koom!" packed up our baggage, including Good's trousers, and indicated the road back. When Good bowed for his trousers he failed to be interested, saying in Zulu it was a shame to conceal his "beautiful white legs." So Good had to be content.

On the way I asked Infadoos about the Kukuana people and King Twala. He replied:

"We came down here from the north 10,000 moons ago. Now and again warriors sweep down against us, and we fight them. But it is the least part of a life since we had war last these others. But since then we had a civil war. It was this way:

"King Twala, who is my half-brother, had a twin brothers. It is not custom to kill the weaker of twins. But their mother hid the twin which was born last, for her heart yearned toward it. When our father, King Saita, died, Imotu, the elder twin, reigned and had a son by his favorite wife. But sickness fell on the people and they blamed Imotu, who was ill himself. Gagool, the wise woman, who does not die, proclaimed to the people, saying, 'Imotu is no King.' Gagool went into a hut and let out Twala, twin brother of Imotu, whom she had kept hidden away since he was a child. She stripped off his mocha (lion cloth) and showed the Kukuana people the mark of the sacred snake coiled around Twala's middle. She cried aloud: 'Behold, your rightful king, whom I have saved for you many a day!' Just then King Imotu rose from his sick bed and came out, with his wife and little son Ignosi (the lightning). Twala, his twin brother, ran to Imotu and stabbed him through the heart. So Twala became king and reigns now. Imotu's wife ran away and escaped with her little son into the mountains, where she must have perished."

"Then, if the child but lived," I said, "he would be the true king?"

"Yes," replied Infadoos. "The sacred snake was around his middle. But, alas, he is dead."

I noticed Umbopa listening closely to Infadoo's tale and struggling as though to recall something long forgotten.

We came toward a kraal, from which company after company of native warriors issued, until twelve companies, totalling 7,800 men, were drawn up ahead of us.

They were men of about forty years, six feet tall, wearing feather head-plumes and waist circlets of white ox-tails. Each man carried a heavy spear and three throwing knives, which they called "tollas."

We branched off Solomon's road to a broad ditch surrounding the kraal and spanned by a rude drawbridge, which was lowered for us.

The kraal was laid out in streets lined with huts, with throngs of girls and women looking curiously at us. They were tall and graceful, with fine figures. They seemed to admire Good's "beautiful white legs" particularly, and old Infadoos proudly waved his hand toward Good's ex tremities every now and then.

We were fed and lodged for the night, while messengers went on ahead to inform King Twala who was at his principal palace, known as Loo.

CHAPTER V.
One-Eyed Twala.

TWO days later, escorted by Infadoos, Scragga and a company of soldiers, we came to the outskirts of Loo. King Twala was to hold his great annual review. Companies of fifty men apiece were coming in from all directions.

It was an enormous place for a native town, quite five miles around. In the distance three mountain peaks, not unlike the twin peaks of Sheba's Breasts, could be seen.

"Those are the Three Wit-hes," said Infadoos. "They are full of caves, with a great pit between them. One kings are buried there in the Pit of Death. Wise men of the old time used to go there to get whatever it was that they came to this country for."

"And what was that?" I asked quickly.

"Nay, I know not," said Infadoos, but he seemed to know more than he would say.

I turned to the others and said in English: "There are King Solomon's mines."

Umbopa, standing by, suddenly said to me in Zulu: "Yes, Macumazahn (using my native name), the diamonds are there surely."

"How do you know?" I asked sharply.

"I dreamed it," answered Umbopa, turning away.

"Now, what is Umbopa at?" said Sir Henry. "He seems to know more than he chooses to say. I wonder, by the way, if he has heard anything of my brother?"

We reached Loo itself by moonlight. We were assigned a hut. In the morning we made our toilets. Good shaved the right side of his face only, at our insistence. The left side now bore a very fair growth of whiskey. He sighed for his trousers.

Taking some rifles and beads, as gifts for King Twala, we were led to an enormous enclosure. All around the outside fence was a row of huts for the King's wives. Opposite the gateway, at the far end of the enclosure, was a larger hut, the king's.

On the open ground were scattered seven or eight thousand warriors, with waving plumes, glancing spears and iron-backed ox-hide shields.

We seated ourselves on three stools in front of the large hut. Umbopa standing. The hut door opened. A gigantic figure, with a splendid tigerskin kaross flung over its shoulders, stepped out, followed by the boy Scragga and what appeared to be a withered-up monkey wrapped in a fur cloak. The figure took a stool. Scragga stood behind. The withered-up monkey squatted down in the shade of the hut.

Then the gigantic figure stood up, slipped off the kaross and revealed a huge savage, with most repulsive countenance. It had but one eye. The other was represented by a hollow in the face. The whole expression was cruel and sensual to an unusual degree. From the large head rose white ostrich plumes. The body was clad in shining chain armor. Around the waist and right knee was the usual garnish of white ox-tails. In the right hand was a huge spear. Around the neck was a thick torque of gold, and bound on the forehead was a single and enormous uncut diamond.

"He humble, oh people!" piped a thin voice that seemed to come from the monkeylike figure. "It is the King!"

The royal salute of "Koom!" came from 8,000 throats, with three salutes by the soldiers raising spears and the soldier dropped his spear which clattered on the limestone floor. Twala turned his one eye that way and called: "Come hither!" A young soldier stepped forward, pale under his dusky skin. He said it was an accident.

"Thou must pay. Thou hast made me look foolish," declared the king. "Scragga, let me see how thou can slay thy spear!"

Scragga stepped forward with an evil grin and lifted his spear. The soldier covered his eyes—ah, God, right home!—the spear stood out a foot behind the man's back. He dropped dead. The corpse was dragged off. Girls sprinkled limo dust over the bloodstains.

We were filled with rage and horror, but we could do nothing. Twala addressed us then:

"White people, what if I make ye like him just here—say?"

"Oh, king," I replied in Zulu, "be careful. Have not Infadoos and Scragga told ye how we strike death from afar? Let us kill an ox for you."

"Let an ox be driven in," ordered the king. Presently an ox came prancing through the kraal gate. I had Sir Henry shoot the animal, so the Kukuanas would see that not I alone possessed the power to kill at a distance.

Sir Henry's first shot killed the ox. Then I had an upright spear and shattered the blade at forty paces. A sigh of astonishment went up. Then I had a rifle, a rifle, which he gingerly received.

The monkeylike figure crept forward toward the king, threw the fur cape robe from its head and revealed a weird face. It was apparently that of a woman of great age. It was more like the face of a mummified corpse. But the black eyes were full of fire and intelligence. The skull was bare and yellow.

In piping voice this horrible figure began to prophesy, "Blood, blood! I smell rivers of blood. I see it. I smell it. I taste it. It runs red upon the ground. I have seen much blood. But I shall see more. I am old. How old am I, think ye? I have seen the white man and know his desires. Who made the great road? Tell me. Ye know not, but I know. It was a white people who were before ye. What is the bright stone on thy forehead, oh King Twala? What is the iron garments on thy breast? I know, I the lamust (witch doctor). What seek ye, white men of the stars? Do ye seek a lost one? One came, and he left but to die. Ye come for the stones. Ye shall find them. But shall ye return, or shall ye stop with me?"

The creature pointed a skinny hand at Umbopa and went on: "Who are thou, with the dark skin and proud bearing? Methinks I know thee. Methinks I can smell the blood in thy veins. Strip off the girdle—"

Here the creature became convulsed and fell foaming to the ground.

CHAPTER VI.
Umbopa's Story.

THE witch-like prophetess was carried into a hut. The King frowned and said:

"White men. It passes in my mind to kill ye. Ha, got has spoken strange words. What say ye?"

I laughed, saying boldly: "Be careful, O, King. Thou saw the fate of the ox."

Twala thought a moment and replied: "Go in peace. Tonight is the great dance. Ye shall see it. Tomorrow I shall think."

Accompanied by Infadoos we returned to our hut. To Infadoos I said: "It seems that Twala is cruel. He answered:

"Alas, the land cries out with his cruelties. Tonight ye shall see at the witch hunt. Many will be smelled out as wizards and will be slain. But, if Twala were slain, Scragga would reign and his heart is kinder than Twala's. If Imotu, the King's twin brother, had not been killed, or if Ignosi, Imotu's son, had lived, it would have been otherwise. But they are dead."

"How knowest thou Ignosi is dead?" asked Umbopa. Listen, Infadoos. When Imotu's wife fled with her boy she did not die. They fled over the mountains and were on until they reached the land of the Amasulu. There they tarried. The mother died of fever. The boy grew to manhood, holding in his heart the story his mother had told him. At last the time came. He joined some white men who would seek this country. They reached the land of the Kukuanas. I am Ignosi, rightful King of the Kukuanas. Behold!"

Umbopa slipped off his moocha. He pointed to the mark of a great snake tattoed in blue around his middle, its tail disappearing in its open mouth just above where the thighs are set in the body.

Infadoos fell on his knees and kissed Umbopa's moocha (lion cloth) full king. After we recovered from our amazement Umbopa, or Ignosi, asked for our help in gaining his throne. We agreed, out of hatred of Twala and on condition that we be aided in our own search, if Twala was overcome. Good also stipulated for his coveted trousers.

Ignosi asked Infadoos if he had ever seen or heard anything of George Neville, Sir Henry's brother. The old man had not. Then Infadoos made a plan. He said that at the witch hunt many men, some of them leaders of regiments of whom the king was jealous, would be "smelled out" and slain. This would create grief and anger. After the dance Infadoos would secretly sound some of his friends among the great chiefs, to win them over. He felt confident that he could raise twenty thousand spears for Ignosi.

We were surprised at this moment to receive, as gift from the king, three shirts of chain armor and three battle axes. Infadoos said these had come down from their forefathers.

That evening we made ready. We put on the mail shirts, which Infadoos had said were spear-proof. We wore them under our ordinary clothing. In addition we took our new battle-axes and concealed our revolvers.

The kraal in front of the king's hut was packed with soldiers, with more outside, about twenty thousand men in all. Infadoos said it was a third of the entire Kukuana army. Twala, Gagool and Scragga came out before them. Beasts were slain and sung. Then great figures of old women, striped with paint and adorned with snakeskins, ran to Gagool. Each bore a small forked stick.

Gagool, the evil-doers," commanded Gagool. The women scattered through the companies.

One near us danced wildly, shrieking that she smelled an evil man. Suddenly she darted toward a tall warrior and touched him with her forked stick.

Instantly the man was dragged forward, than speared to death by a band of executioners. Others were brought up rapidly, some of them men of prominence. As each fell, dying from spear thrusts, Twala kept count—for all the world like a black Madame Defarge, as Good said.

One hundred and three had been counted by Twala when Gagool herself suddenly sprang forward toward us, touched Umbopa, alias Ignosi, on the shoulder and screamed: Kill him, kill him!"

Two executioners stepped forward. I shouted to Twala: "He is our servant. He shall not die!"

"Gagool, mother of the witch doctors, has smelled him," was the sullen answer, "Seize him!"

We drew our revolvers, covering Twala, Gagool and the head executioner. Twala winced perceptibly as he saw the barrel come in line with his broad chest.

"Well," I said, "What is it to be, Twala?"

CLUBS USED BY CANADIANS IN TRENCHES

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 28.—British troops fighting in Flanders have adopted the weapon of the ancient cave men for fighting in the trenches, according to a letter received by the Rev. A. Logan Geggie from his nephew, who is at the front with the Canadian contingent. In his letter the writer says:

"For our very latest weapon we have gone back to the early days. It is a club or, according to the military vocabulary, a 'knobkerrie,' a wooden affair similar to a policeman's truncheon, weighed with lead and very liberally studded with boot tacks. It is for hot hand-to-hand affairs in a narrow trench.

Betting Favors 'Antis', 2 to 1, in Wall Street

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—Odds offered in Wall Street on the results of the vote on woman suffrage are not encouraging to that cause in the election.

Fred Schumm, who usually acts as betting commissioner, has placed many bets at 2 to 1 that suffrage will be defeated. He is willing to bet $1,000 even that the amendment will be defeated by 50,000 votes.

Twenty-six hours of solid talk by speakers for suffrage will be the spectacular wind-up of the votes-for-women campaign. Beginning at 10 o'clock Friday night the women will speak in relays until midnight on Saturday, when the equal suffrage fight practically will be closed.

Children Trapped by Flames Perish in Peabody Farochial School

SLIDES 20 FEET WITH BOY ON SHOULDERS

Of all the incidents connected with the fire, there was none more spectacular and appealing than the heroism of Michael Hennessy.

The boy was a pupil on the second floor of the school. When the fire began, he and the other pupils in his room marched into the hall, then at sight of the flame and smoke broke ranks and started for the stairs.

There was a little boy in the room named Thomas Shay, who is crippled with a broken leg.

Hennessy saw him hobbling toward the stair, and turned back to his assistance.

By the time they reached the stair head, the hall below was jammed. Hennessy saw there was no chance for Shay in the throng.

He turned back; they made their way to the windows, and Hennessy, a sturdy little chap, made the other boy straddle the window sill.

Then Hennessy swung himself to a water pipe beside the window, and at his command Shay climbed on Hennessy's shoulders.

Hennessy then slid to the ground, twenty feet below, where a score of men caught him and Shay and hurried them to safety.

REPORT FIRE SEEMED TO APPEAR IN THREE PLACES AT SAME TIME

One report was that the fire seemed to break out in three parts of the building simultaneously.

Owing to the fact that there were no fire escapes, firemen and rescuers were handicapped in reaching the windows, at which many boys and girls were frantically calling for help.

It is believed that several pupils on the upper floors, finding their calls unanswered, returned inside and joined the struggling mass inside the front door.

This door was a double affair, half of which was bolted to the floor under ordinary circumstances. There was delay in getting the second part of the door open, while the children were crushing about it, frantic to reach the street.

There were many pathetic scenes in the church and outside the burning building, when frantic mothers and fathers implored the priests and city authorities to tell them if their children were safe.

The girls told Chief of Police Charles E. Bill they were invited to take a ride by a stranger.

A SMALL AMOUNT

Down and a few dollars a month will give you possession of a cozy little home in Boston's beautiful suburbs. See the "Real Estate" columns of the Boston AMERICAN today for bargains.

James Flynn, all of the sixth grade, who received bad burns in their race out of the building, told of their jumps from the third floor into blankets held by men on the ground.

"We thought we would never get out," said James Flynn, whose ear was terribly burned. "We just got to the windows in time and jumped.

"The stairs were in no condition to use, and the smoke was so thick you could not see a foot ahead of you."

Mary Lidney, thirteen, and Margaret Flynn, both of Franklin street, were on the top floor when the alarm sounded. Together they started down the stairs.

When they got to the second floor the Flynn girl fainted. Her companion frantically tried to assist her and ran out into the hallway to see if she could get someone to help her.

The smoke was by this time getting denser and when the Lidney girl stroped her way back through the smoke she was unable to locate her companion. After searching for a few moments she jumped out of a window to the first floor.

GIRLS MAKE LEAP.

A number of the pupils escaped by jumping from the windows. Among them were Mary Sullivan of Foster street and Lena Kitching. Both leaped from a window on the second floor.

Frank Anderson and David Murphy of No. 266 Washington street jumped from the top floor, landing uninjured.

One of the heroes of the fire proved to be Hartbolo Sullivan, sixteen, who carried Sister Agnes Marie, one of the teachers at thes chool, on his back down the water spout of the building hand over hand.

The crowd gathered swiftly it was a crowd torn by anguish and sympathy. Relatives of children in the building predominated.

They forced their way as near to the fire lines as possible. They stood, hand-wringing and mazed some of them. Others sobbed and asked for tidings of their little ones.

Everyone seemed to be crying. It was a crowd of anxiety, grief and tears. Those who didn't have loved ones in the burned building sympathized with those who did and tried to help trace the missing and fo comfort heart-broken bystanders and neighbors.

RUSH TO HELP.

The whole town was flooded with grief. Every trolley car and automobile brought men, women and children with anxious faces and tear-stained eyes.

Neighbors of parents whose children attended the school volunteered their automobiles and carriages. Trolley cars arrived from Lynn and Salem and Swampscott with friends and relatives who wanted to help.

Girls Said Stranger Gave Them a Ride

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Oct. 28.—Yvonne Cote, sisters, and Lillian Danielle, fifteen, of New Bedford, were found by the police wandering about the streets at 1 a. m. today. The girls told the Policeman Edward Smith they did not know how they reached the city. Officer Smith notified the girls to take an all night car for Providence, returning later in a jitney. The Cote girl said she lived at No. 9 South Water street, and Lavalle girl said she lived at No. 948 Water street, New Bedford.

The girls told Chief of Police Charles E. Bill they were invited to take a ride by a stranger.

ROLL CALL IN CHURCH TO LEARN THE NUMBER OF MISSING PUPILS

The church building near the school was opened for a calling of the roll of the survivors. The children, some of them suffering from minor injuries, were led into the edifice and their names were called from the school records.

As soon as a pupil had answered to his or her name they were taken to one side of the building. It was hoped by this means to establish the list of missing as early as possible.

Most of the twenty bodies that were taken to the undertaking shops directly after being brought from the building were difficult to identify.

The fire raged so long in the building that it was believed identification of further bodies would be even more difficult.

The Mother Superior of the school was so overcome that she could not speak. She sat in a dazed condition, surrounded by other sisters. Many of the sisters were suffering from burns, for they did not leave the building until the last moment.

Laurence Cuslar leaped from the top floor with his hair and clothing in flames. He broke one leg when rescuers failed to catch him after his long leap.

Sister Aldegarde, one of the heroines of the fire, is reported to be in a critical condition at the Thomas Hospital. Her face was badly burned and she is suffering from shock.

Sister Catherine of Nativity was badly burned about the arms and body.

BOY TELLS OF SAVING SISTERS BY THRILLING SLIDE

Daniel Harney, eleven, of No. 29 Berry street, who was badly burned about the head, said:

The first we knew of any trouble in our room was when one of the sisters came in and whispered something to our teachers. Just then the gong rang.

We filed out into the hall, down the stairs, but didn't get far because the stairs were awfully hot. The smoke was very thick and most of us got frightened, for we couldn't breathe.

The lines then became separated and we all had to get out the best way we could. "Jimmie" Sullivan and I got to a window on the second floor, climbed out on to a water spout and slid to the ground.

Later I saw Sisters Murray and Martin come down the same spout in the same manner. They were badly burned in passing one of the windows.

One of the sisters who conducts the fifth grade of girls had a hard time getting out. I saw her get badly burned and I was told she was taken to the hospital.

JUMPED INTO BLANKETS.

Dry Cleaning Is Play For Women

Put gasoline and solvite in a wash boiler and save $5 in an hour.

Every dry clean at home? Well, it's so easy, inexpensive and the results so pleasing you'll be surprised. Any woman can clean and renew the brightness of ribbons, silks, satins, laces, yokes, silk shirtwaists, gloves and shoes, furs, neckties, children's coats suits, caps, dress, lawn, crandy ann, chiffon dresses, fancy coats, veils, woolen garments, fancy work, draperies, rugs, in fact, any and everything that would be ruined with soap and water.

Get two ounces of solvite at any drug store and put it in two gallons of gasoline, where it quickly dissolves. Then put in the goods to be cleaned, rub a little and out they come looking as bright and fresh as new. You will find nothing fades, shrinks or wrinkles, requiring no pressing.

Any woman can do five dollars' worth of home dry cleaning in a few moments and you can't make a mistake. Your grocer or any garage will supply the gasoline and the drug store will sell you two ounces of solvite, which is simply a gasoline soap. Then a wash boiler or large dishpan completes your dry-cleaning outfit.—Advertisement.

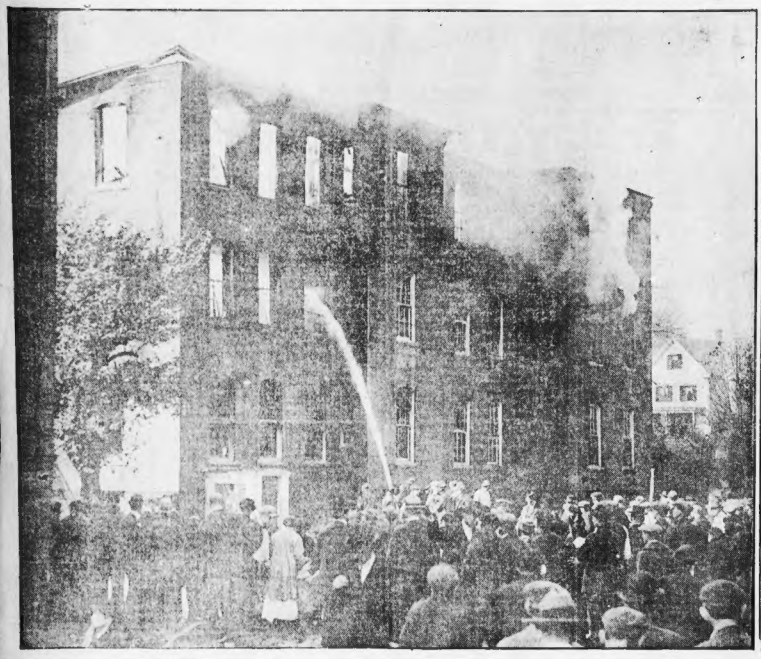
Pupils, Frenzied With Fear, Fight Sisters Who Try to Check Panic



Fighting the fire in the school from the rear. The photograph was taken after the roof had fallen in. Many of the survivors were led to safety by the sisters through the covered door shown at the lower left hand corner of the building.

View of the front of the burning school taken after the flames had eaten away the floors, showing rescuers at work, and a throng of parents and relatives of children waiting definite news of their little ones. The crush in which many children were injured took place near the main door shown.

One Brave Nun Terribly Burned Passing Children to Safety Through Flames.

first version; the second was that the fire started near the boiler and caused an explosion, which spread the fire throughout the building.

Later investigation blasted both theories. Both the State boiler inspector and the head of the school said there was no explosion of the boiler, while the janitor stated that the fires were banked and there was little or no steam in the heating apparatus.

Many neighbors said they heard no explosion. Others said they heard one.

Concerning those children who lost their lives, many will never be positively identified. The fire, passing over, left each a mere indistinguishable little form.

FEAR MANY OTHERS ARE LOST.

That there are others dead is considered certain. Father Murphy, head of the school, said early in the fire that he expected bodies would be found on the third floor. The second and third floors collapsed before the fire was over; but it is held certain that from six to fifteen bodies will be discovered in the ashes.

Medical Examiner Foster examined the bodies at the undertaking rooms in an effort to find means of identifying them, but without success.

Father Murphy, head of the school, appealed as soon as the fire was extinguished to those parents who had children in the school to report whether their boys and girls had come home.

VICTIMS WERE ALL CHILDREN.

In the throng about the building as it burned and afterward were scores of these grief-wrung parents—some hunting in a frenzy for their children, others, mutely thankful, hurrying away with the daughters or sons they had found in the crowd.

It was a holocaust of children; for so far as I known no grown people lost their lives.

That the means for escape from the fire were not adequate, and that the failure of the water supply contributed to the loss of life were the claims of those who witnessed the conflagration.

There were no fire escapes. There were two stairways, one leading to the front and one to the back. The rear door, it is asserted, was locked; the front door was in two halves, and the pressure of the first rush for the open forced this door shut so that for a long time it could not be opened.

Thus the great majority of those who escaped were thrown or jumped out the first and second-story windows.

HYDRANT NEAR SCHOOL BROKE.

The water supply was inadequate. A hydrant near the school broke, and one man stated it was twelve minutes after the firemen arrived before the first streams were playing on the flames.

The first victim identified was Elizabeth Nolan. Most of those who were killed were beyond naming.

Mother Superior Carmelita gave the alarm, sounding the fire gong. She was in a room in the school, became uneasy, thought she smelled smoke, and stepped into the hall.

A boy ran toward her, screaming "Fire." The hall was smoke-filled. She ran down the stairs, sounded the gong, then directed and assisted at the work of passing the children out the first-story windows.

The dramatic and heart-rending incidents that attended the fire were beyond number. But the most stirring scene was enacted at the very front door.

In the rush for the door when the fire gong sounded, a number of pupils got out. But the sweep of flames cut off that exit so suddenly that perhaps a dozen boys and girls were trapped inside the very entrance, one body lying within three feet of the threshold.

Firemen, with two lines of hose, made a rush at the doorway and tried to fight their way in. A sudden sweep of draft sent the flames so fairly in their faces they were beaten, staggering, back.

They made a second try, this time shooting over the tangle of little bodies a number of heavy rubber blankets. Then, from outside the door and as near as they could get they directed a stream of water upon the blankets in a desperate hope of keeping off the flames till rescue could be made.

DESPERATE FOR CHILDREN.

But in a short time so desperately swift was the progress of the fire, the efforts of these firemen were needed elsewhere. They turned over one of the nozzles to th Patrolman Timothy O'Connor. The officer forced his way to the very doorway, and there stood, spraying the water over the blanket-covered heap.

The wall above him was shaking, there was constant danger of his destruction by the fall of bricks or glass or the sudden sweep of the flame.

But he stuck there, clinging to the chance in a thousand that the fire might be controlled in time to allow rescuers to reach the little pile of bodies and perhaps find among them one where life still remained.

MANY INJURED BY JUMPING.

The steady work of the line of hose in O'Connor's hands kept back the flames that crept along the floor toward the bodies and made possible the saving of a life.

There were many injured. Some were burned, some bruised or shaken when they jumped from the windows of the school. The injured were hurried first to the Thomas Hospital in Peabody, and when accommodations there were exhausted, to other institutions in adjoining towns and cities.

Of the fifteen Sisters of Notre Dame who served as teachers in the school, all were believed to have been saved, but one was taken to the hospital in a serious condition.

In the case of many of those taken to the hospital, the physicians said death was sure.

BODIES TAKEN TO UNDERTAKERS.

The fire started, it was believed, in the neighborhood of the heating apparatus. It was followed in an incredibly short time by an explosion of the boiler, which threw pieces of torn metal and fragments of hot coals upward through the wooden floors of the buildings, starting the fire anew in a dozen different places, and cutting off escape by some of the windows and doors.

At 10:30 there were ten bodies at Conway's undertaking establishment. At that hour there were at least ten visible inside the doorway of the school.

To show how swiftly the fire spread, the story of Elizabeth Brannigan of Haskell place, a sixteen-year-old girl, who was a member of the third class in the high school, is illuminating.

"We were at our half-hourly devotions, in our room on the third floor," she said, "when the fire signal started.

"I supposed and I think others thought the same, that the signal was merely for a test drill, such as were frequently given.

"We rose, and marched steadily out of the room into the hallway; but as we came into the hallway, we knew there was really a fire.

PUPIL TELLS GRAPHIC STORY.

"For there was smoke in the hall, lots of it, and there was hot air that burned you. We could hardly breathe.

"The heat was terrible. We were on the third floor. We went downstairs as fast as we could.

"But we could not get out of the door. There was no door we could get out of. We ran into the schoolrooms down there and threw up the windows and jumped out.

"They were seven or eight feet above the ground. They were the first floor windows. All of us who could jumped out of those windows. I was badly shaken by the fall. Then I ran straight away till I was beyond the heat of the building."

There were no outside fire escapes upon the school, it was stated by a police officer, and he added that the stairways were of wood.

The fires started at 9 o'clock exactly, according to the general version. The boiler explosion occurred about three minutes later, and the explosion sent a great column of black smoke high into the air above the building.

STATE OFFICIALS BEGIN AN INQUIRY

Immediately upon being notified of the explosion and fire, Acting Chief George C. Neal of the State police and Deputy Inspector George Lusk of the Boiler Inspection Department of the State Police left Boston for the scene and an immediate investigation of the accident was started.

WHAT IS AN INTERNAL BATH?

If you were to ask a dozen people this question probably not one would answer correctly, although half a million Americans are now using it with a marked improvement in health and strength.

The Internal Bath of today is no more like the old-fashioned Enema than a Vacuum Cleaner is like a whisk-broom.

Now, by means of the "J.B.L. Cascade," simple warm water cleanses the Lower Intestine the entire length, removes all the poisonous waste matter therein, and keeps it as clean and pure as Nature demands it shall be for perfect health.

You will be astonished at your feelings the morning after taking an Internal Bath by means of the "J.B.L. Cascade." You will feel bright, brisk, confident and as though everything is "working right"—and it is.

It absolutely removes constipation and prevents Auto-Intoxication.

Hiker-Jarvis Drug Stores in New England will explain it fully to you, and on request will give you a free book on the subject by an eminent specialist. Ask or send for this free booklet today, called "Why Man of Today Is Only Half Efficient," while you think of it.—Advertisement.

Scenes of Panic, Horror and Heroism in Rush of Children to Escape

Little Ones Are Crushed and Trampled on in Jam at Main Door.

The classes in St. John's Parochial School met at 8:30 [illegible] and [illegible] began [illegible].

The pupils were in their first half-hourly devotion when the fire gong gave the warning. Many of the children believed it was merely a [illegible], such as were frequently held at the school. They [illegible] quietly in their places and marched into the halls.

But in a moment, on the ground floor [illegible] spread in ripples through the building. The fire was in the basement eating its way up through the floors, and the children nearest, emerging from their schoolrooms and ending themselves in smoke and [illegible] heat made a rush for the open air.

The fire was so far advanced [illegible] even on the top floor, [illegible] that the main [illegible] pupils marched into the [illegible] found them [illegible] and [illegible] in [illegible] and [illegible].

RUSH FOR STAIRS.

When the [illegible] on the [illegible] were to press in spite [illegible] calls of the Sisters of Notre Dame who served as teachers in the school, there was a concerted rush down the stairways.

The streams of running children poured down the stairs, some falling, struggling to their feet and falling again.

The very weight of the mass of them crushed and bruised almost every one save those ahead. Those who fell in some cases rolled clear down the stairways under the feet of their comrades.

These panic stricken children fought against the sisters, screaming, wild with agonized fear.

The first of the children safely reached the open air, pouring [illegible] the doorway. Then the tail [illegible] squarely at the door. It is reported there was some difficulty in opening the lower half of the doorway.

PACKED AT DOOR

In any case, there was a struggling throng of children in the hall before the doorway, so [illegible] that after the [illegible] so crushed together that [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] the street.

[illegible] building but a few minutes, and this terrific jam at the front door was at its height, it is believed, when there was an explosion in the basement.

The effect of that explosion [illegible] out the building as a sower scatters wheat. Doors and [illegible] were shaken or cracked or splintered. Brands from the fires in the heating plant were hurled like blazing projectiles through the wooden floors, and thereafter the fire seemed to grow of [illegible] fifteen minutes after the fire [illegible] were pouring from almost every window on the lower floor of the building.

CRUSHED OR STIFLED

The [illegible] front door was dissolved when some of the teachers succeeded [illegible]

Main doorway of St. John's Parochial School, Peabody, where most of the deaths occurred. Children, overcome by flames and smoke, lay in a tangled heap here, while firemen battled to reach them in time.

[illegible] by other ways. By that time, children to the number of six or a dozen had been crushed into unconsciousness or stifled by the smoke and flame, so that their bodies were left in a [illegible] and second floor windows. But [illegible] ground floor was ablaze.

Desperate Efforts of Firemen to Reach Her Frustrated by Sheet of Flame.

There was a delay in getting the first streams of water onto the burning school building in Peabody, and in a very short time the entire building appeared to be in a mass of flames.

While several lines of hose were being coupled to a hydrant on Chestnut street the cap of the hydrant blew off with a bang, and caused a delay of a few moments in the connecting of these lines of hose.

Spectators said that this delay could not have made much difference, however, as by that time the building was nearly enveloped in flame.

The general alarm sounded brought help from the Salem department, a large detail of firemen with extra pieces of apparatus under the direction of Chief Albert J. Caulfield, formerly of the Boston Fire Department, responding.

These men aided the Peabody department in the recovery of the bodies of the burned children.

DOORS BLOCKED BY FIRE.

Early in the fire attempts at rescue were made impossible by the intenseness of the sheet of flame that enveloped the doors of the building.

Frantic attempts on the part of the firemen, police and citizens to rescue the children crowded at the main door of the building were frustrated by the intense heat.

One little girl, who could not have been over ten years old, reached the outer edge of the front door, and fell unconscious from the smoke and the flame just as she almost reached relief.

Her little head was right on the top step of the flight of stairs leading to the front door, and the agonized watchers saw the flames creep over and envelop the little form.

At the sight of this an effort was made by the firemen to mass their forces and all lines of hose that could be brought into play were centred on the front door, but the intensity of the flames kept them back thirty feet.

FLAMES THWART RESCUE.

This concerted effort on the part of the firemen succeeded in reducing the flames somewhat and an attempt to rescue the bodies that were in sight on the front steps was made.

Two or three bodies had been carried when the flames again [illegible]

We had been in the school about an hour, when the bell rang. We [illegible] was the bell for [illegible] and Miss Duff knew [illegible] from the inner floor. There was no fire bell.

"I quickly arose and filed out in perfect order. As we passed through, the sisters were waiting in the hall and the pupils were all lined up, ready to fall in behind.

So far as we saw there was no confusion until we reached the lower floor, where the pupils of the second and third grades were assembled. Several of the younger girls had been overcome with fright and had fainted.

Edward Quirk, a salesman in a hardware store near the school, who was one of the first to arrive after the alarm had been given, said:

The scene when I arrived at the school was dreadful. It will keep me awake nights for a while, I'm afraid. The exits were jammed with struggling boys and girls and others were jumping from the upper stories.

COATS FOR LIFE-NETS.

Walter Cahill, David Barry, others I did not know, and I caught many of the falling children in coats and overcoats, which we spread after the fashion of life nets.

The coats were too small to make good life nets, but we doubtless saved many of them from death or broken limbs.

At this time we did not know any of the children had lost their lives. When we had finished taking the children from the building Mr. Barry and I ran to the main door.

When we opened it we saw the body of a little girl on the floor. There were other bodies further back. We did not count them, but carried them to a safe place.

Mary McCarthy hurried to the scene from Lynn. She had a brother and sister in the school. She had received word that her brother, Dennis, fifteen, was reported dead, but her little sister hadn't been well enough to go to school today. On the trolley car she met Mrs. Julia Duff, who cried when she heard of the probable fate of little Dennis McCarthy.

AVOIDS MOTHERS.

Mrs. Duff's experience was typical. It illustrated the far-reaching effects of the tragedy on the homes in Essex county, for if families escaped direct grief they were saddened by the news of death or serious injury to children of neighbors and relatives.

It was astonishing how quickly [illegible] and the firemen were driven back to [illegible] street again.

Meanwhile, sparks from the burning building were flying over the roofs of adjoining dwelling houses and hundreds [illegible] do what they could and whose hearts were made heavy by the grief of the mothers all about them, who cried and wrung their hands and went through the crowd like persons crazed.

SATURDAY CARD IS SPICY ONE ON GRIDIRON

By HERMAN NICKERSON.

This week's work in football has been one that would please the most strenuous individual. The big teams have all covered that they must get busy, and they have.

All eyes are turned to the games of next Saturday, on which the "dope" upon the games to come will be based. Teams which on form should have made better showing have been spurred on to the test, which, while not of a crucial character, must be taken as meaning much in the ultimate standing, when the curtain is rung down upon the gridiron struggles of 1915.

The trouble with the big teams and what has bothered the coaches for weeks is that while they have good material, the machine is not in working order. Individual pass means much in football, but when universities find themselves having to deal with new men, the process of development is slow. The four big colleges are in a position today where anything is likely to happen.

HARVARD MUST WAKE UP.

Harvard has a team before it that means much. The team is but a few days away from its struggle with Princeton, a team well trained in all departments of the game. If there is anything to the old Tiger precedent set to the followers of the Crimson, it is to the effect that the Tigers, no matter how much opposition all situations may be in will [illegible] the boys are [illegible] When the Harvard men [illegible] of those of the Princeton [illegible] to be classed as one of football as the year will prove.

Just how the Tigers are the favorites a week hence [illegible] opinion [illegible] made it easy to [illegible] of football the crowd [illegible]

SATURDAY'S BIG GAMES

[illegible] the Tigers [illegible] nothing very [illegible] Princeton [illegible] last game [illegible] Princeton [illegible] Blue must be beaten [illegible]

There will be only [illegible] the Tigers [illegible] Navy team is [illegible] Navy [illegible] anything [illegible] and in the same [illegible] Princeton certainly [illegible] fans.

TIGERS BATTLE WILLIAMS.

Princeton [illegible] Williams for an opponent at Chicago, [illegible] is expected from [illegible] Tigers [illegible] Princeton [illegible] shown just how far the "dope" on the [illegible] can be from being [illegible] fine [illegible] from all [illegible] in fact, Princeton should win easily.

It seems to be only a question of how far the [illegible] wish to push the [illegible] but now much they [illegible] them to answer. The wearers of the Crimson colors are in a position to [illegible] the best team in the country a run for the money.

If anything can be deduced from the showing of team work, perfection in forward passing, fine direction and confidence in the backfield department two fingers are there.

BIG DAY AT B. C.

There is a big [illegible] Boston College [illegible] which will decide the new field at Cleveland Heights when Boston College will line up against Holy Cross. Perhaps this is the most important game of the day so far as Boston football fans are concerned.

RULING IS BLOW TO NEW HAVEN DEFENDANTS

By L. V. B. RUCKER,
Staff Correspondent of International News Service.

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—Judge Hunt in the United States District Court dealt a severe blow to the New Haven defendants when he declared that the court would let in all evidence concerning the New Haven's dabbling in electric lines in New England, whether they were inter-state lines or not.

The ruling came when the defence objected to a letter read by the government concerning the acquisition by the New Haven of forty-mile strip of trolley line running from Meriden to Naugatuck in Connecticut to shut off competition from a proposed electric line paralleling the New Haven.

The letter tended to show how the New Haven directors felt no stone unturned to choke off all electric as well as rail and water competition in New England. Today the government entered into the third stage of the New Haven's "expansion period" under Charles S. Mellen.

The prosecution proved conclusively the first thing today that the New Haven directors financially aided Attorney Goldsmith suit against the New York and New England R. R. that brought it that road to its knees in receivership and enabled the New Haven to acquire its bonds and stocks.

Frank M. Swacker, assistant attorney-general, read letters from President Clark and Vice President Hall to William Rockefeller, referring to the New Haven reimbursing Goldsmith and his backers for their expenditures in the suit. Goldsmith, a Boston saloon-keeper, and a minority stockholder in the New England brought suit to prevent that road from issuing bonds which would have kept it solvent.

"Whatever we have to pay," wrote Hall to Rockefeller in this connection, "even if it be the full amount asked, it was worth it to us as it enabled us to get the New England."

Boy of 5 Shoots Chum, Who May Die

Melvin Hurley, aged five, of No. 127 Heath street, Somerville, accidentally shot and fatally wounded Elito Giannone, four, son of Carl Giannone of No. 34 Edgar avenue. The Hurley boy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Hurley. Unknown to his mother, he took his father's revolver from a bureau drawer. Melvin stood on the top step of the front stoop and fired. The Giannone boy was on the lower step. The bullet pierced Elito's lung just over the heart. The surgeons at the Somerville Hospital say the child cannot recover.

Revives Baby Discovered in an Ash Barrel

A six-pound baby at the City Hospital today took up the burdens of life all over again after having lasted death and being brought to life again in its brief existence.

Dr. R. E. Rhames of No. 293 Dudley street told how by artificial respiration, mouth to mouth breathing and every other device known to medical science he brought the baby back to life after it had been found wrapped in a newspaper in an ash barrel near the plant of the Gibson Bedstead Company on Dudley street.

"I am the physician to the factory," said Dr. Rhames, "and so when the engineer found this baby I was sent for. I found the baby apparently dead. But everything possible was at hand in the factory to help the work of resuscitation.

"I started with hot towels and flannels to stimulate the skin and try to get back warmth into the little body."

MOTOR NOTES

By J. C. KERRISON.

The so-called boycotting of the Ford Canadian company does not seem to have had any detrimental effect upon its finances or its business as viewed by the latest announcement from that company, when it on Monday declared a 600 per cent stock dividend. The Canadian Ford Company has always been eminently successful, and none of its stockholders are losing wake nights wondering how to protect their interests.

According to an opinion given by the Attorney-General of New Hampshire, in answer to an inquiry from the Dover police department, any person registered as a dealer who uses any car for any purpose other than that of buying, selling or exchanging cars for the time being to be a dealer under statute definition. In other words, dealers who put their cars to use outside of business must pay the fee for registration of pleasure cars.

TODAY'S STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor

Stocks were at their lowest around 2 o'clock, but there was some improvement a few minutes later. Trading was on a large scale in the afternoon. Wall Street was rife with rumors, and as this was one reason why war industries held off. Filing of the government appeal to its suit against U. S. Steel was adverse to stocks of the latter.

At 2:15 large losses in New York included American Can 1, Lackawanna Steel 1¾, U. S. Steel 1, Car and Foundry 2¼, Baldwin 8½, Crucible 2⅝, Distillers 2½, General Motors 4, Goodrich 1¾, Maxwell 5¾, Studebaker 1¾, after being off 2½; Westinghouse 1¾, Willys-Overland 10, Tennessee Copper 1¾, Inspiration ⅝, Utah ½, China ⅜, Union Pacific ⅜, New York Central ⅝, Reading ⅜, New Haven 1 and American Smelting ⅛.

Anaconda was up ⅜, Rock Island 1, Erie ⅝, Reading ⅜, Lehigh Valley ⅝ and New York Central ⅜.

In Boston coppers had weakened, Osceola being 2½ and Tamarack 1, lower, with declines by others fractional and general, and Superior was off 1⅜, American Zinc 1⅜, New Haven ⅝, Boston & Maine ¼ and Woolen common ⅛.

DRIVE AGAINST WAR STOCKS.

When the New York market opened irregularly, inward sell orders resumed their drive against war industrials and they were the weakest issues. Selling during the forenoon was small, but before the first hour was over a number were notably weak. Bethlehem Steel, Willys-Overland, Studebaker, Baldwin, Willys-Overland, Maxwell and Crucible. U. S. Steel was under steady pressure and by noon was more than a point lower. News from the Balkans and Far East had bearish influence. Sentiment against war stocks appears to be spreading, as in the opinion of large financial interests to any extent. Weak holders, as usual, are the sufferers. U. S. Steel has not receded as much as many traders expected. Only moderate selling was met in a rallying tendency, but enough stocks were offered to prevent a recovery. The list receded further and while it steadied at intervals the trend was downward during the morning and at midday Baltic ruled higher for awhile, but eased off finally. Coppers had a strong feature most of the morning, there being heavy trading in Anaconda, which had its high test since Amalgamated dissolution. It withstood the reaction better than other issues. Reports that the New Southern Railway was attributed to efforts to secure business in the South. Margin requirements are one reason why certain industrials have sagged. They are now in large part less than for many weeks. Foreign exchange had a decline, but there is very little demand for bills. The Bank of England reports its proportion of reserve to liabilities as 39.01 per cent against 36.97 a week ago. Trading was active, transactions for the full session totalling nearly 600,000 shares. Some speculators believe that the coppers will lead the next price advance.

LOCAL MARKET WAS FIRMER.

The Boston market was firmer at the start, comparatively than New York and there was increased demand for local coppers, with business of fair volume. Later the weakness of New York was reflected in the home list. There was no especial feature to trading here. Inconsequential for copper metal is increasing, but most of the selling is to Europe. Lead and spelter are firm. Sales of both copper and futures were off 2s. 6d. while electrolytic unchanged. Lead was 2s. 6d. lower and spelter was 42 higher.

SAYS IT TOOK LONG TO GET WATER

Everett W. Langley, circulation manager of the Salem Evening Mail, was one of the first outsiders on the scene. He helped the firemen lay the first lines of hose and says it took 12 minutes to get water. He says this delay was a serious factor. Here is Mr. Langley's story:

"I was in H. B. Raymond's store in Peabody Square, just across from the schoolhouse, when the fire broke out. The scenes were heartrending. I reached the burning building with the firemen. Flames were bursting out of the basement windows when I got there.

"I helped lay the first two lines of hose, but it took 12 minutes to get any water, though connections were made promptly. Before the first stream was turned on the flames had reached the third floor and enveloped the entire building.

"Everything was confusion. The firemen worked hard, but there did not seem to be proper organization, but they were willing and courageous.

"The water delay was serious. There was nothing to check the progress of the flames during the first minutes after we had connected the hose.

"We could see the children at the windows and hear their shrieks and screams. Children living and dead were being carried out and laid on the ground by the firemen and others. Some were burned beyond recognition.

"While I was there I did not see a ladder raised to the upper floors on which crowded the windows.

"Many pupils of the school showed 672 pupils, of which about 100 were in the high school grade on the third floor. There was a Mother Superior and sixteen sisters of the Notre Dame order.

"Parents and relatives of the children hurried to the scene with blanched faces. They wept and moaned and wrung their hands. Above all could be heard the screams of the children as the flames, like a furnace, roared.

"It was too horrible to describe. I never want to see anything like it again.

"It was a pity there was such serious delay in the water supply."

Defeat Boston Men at New Haven Meeting

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Oct. 28.—The Boston attorneys who represent 500 stockholders of the New Haven road who attempted to delay the acceptance of the portion of the annual report which recommended the abandonment of trolley lines against the formal directors and others for restitution of funds lost by the management, were defeated at the adjourned meeting of the stockholders held here today.

Britain Refuses More Proof Time

LOCAL BREVITIES

"Hyphenated-Americans are not so much to be feared in this country as the Denatured Christians," asserted the Rev. Dr. Guy C. Lamson of Philadelphia at the thirty-first annual meeting of the Massachusetts Baptist Sunday School Association in the First Baptist Church, today.

A slight blaze in the second balcony of the Boston Opera House caused by an insulated wire attached to a chandelier caused considerable excitement today when the entire company in "Carmencita" was taking part in a rehearsal. The blaze broke out during the Passion, Youth and Experience number in an extinguisher each and rushed to the scene.

Suppressed competition that gives the Warren Brothers' Company a practical monopoly for bituminous pavements under Mayor Curley's administration, is charged in a special report made to the Boston City Council by the Finance Commission today.

Has Cupid has captured the secretary of the Boston City Council? Such is the Xavier Chisholm, who today sent out cards announcing the engagement of Miss Elizabeth Claudia Lawrence, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lawrence, of No. 37 Bellevue street, Dorchester. Mr. Chisholm has served secretary of the city Council since 1910.

Although it has not yet been officially announced it was learned today on good authority that the Boston Druit Commission of Boston has taken over the interests of the Elder-Dempster British line and will operate them under the U. S. flag. The vessels are the Arcadian, the Portugal, the Canada, the Rotterdam and the San Jacinto, which will be added to the fleet brings the total of United Fruit steamers flying the American flag up to seventy-two.

John H. Corcoran of Cambridge was for the fifth time elected president of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade at the annual meeting at the Vendome today. The meeting discussed business and military preparedness, old age pensions, future legislation and the probable economic conditions which will follow the declaration of peace in Europe.

Asks Wilson Demand Mexicans End Raids

By International News Service.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Governor Ferguson of Texas today appealed to President Wilson by wire to bring all possible pressure to bear on General Carranza to stop the raids across the Texas border. Secretary Tumulty earlier today announced that Ferguson had appealed for more troops. This afternoon the secretary said the report was wrong, that all the Texas Governor wanted was for the President to get assurances from Carranza that he would stop the raids from the Mexican side.

OUR FIRST DUTY IS TO MAINTAIN PEACE; OUR NEXT DUTY IS TO PREPARE FOR WAR

The Way to Provide a Citizen Soldiery With an Adequate Supply and Reserve of Officers

ACCORDING to a Washington dispatch to an administration organ, Secretary Garrison plans a "continental army" of a million men, and hopes that within six years that number will be enrolled in the regular army or in reserves, the latter serving two months each year in camp.

The Secretary proposes, in order to officer this army of one million men, that one hundred and forty-four more cadets be appointed annually to West Point.

As it takes four years for a West Point cadet to graduate, the country would have under this plan, at the end of six years, two hundred and eighty-eight additional officers to officer a million men!

It is probable that, on account of the recent conversion of the Democratic administration to the principle of preparedness, the responsible members of the administration have not been able to give the same careful thought to the subject that those have given who have supported the principle of preparedness and advocated an adequate military and naval system for many years. This plan of Secretary Garrison is a good example of the hasty and insufficient thought that has been given to this vital subject.

Today, in a time of perfect peace, we have 4,823 commissioned officers to command an army of 85,659 – or about one officer to each eighteen men. At that rate, an army of a million men would require about 56,000 officers. The astonishing plan of the Secretary of War provides 288 additional West Pointers at the end of six years, and he thinks that with the promotion of men from the ranks and the appointment of graduates from approved military schools the number might be raised to 1,000.

Even one thousand officers, Secretary Garrison's maximum estimate, would be only one fifty-sixth the number required for one million men in times of peace.

But in time of war more officers will be needed than in time of peace. That has been made clear in the course of this war. Much of the failure of the British troops in the field has been due to a lack of officers, for the British, like the United States, maintain a small standing army and trust to one great military academy to furnish all needed officers.

The British loss of officers in the first thirteen months of the war was 15,846. Strangely enough, this was almost exactly one officer to each eighteen men lost.

Instead of having one hundred and forty-four additional officers created every year, there should be not less than fifty times that many, and probably even a great many more than that.

The best way in which officers can be produced in these numbers is the way which has been so long advocated by the Hearst newspapers, namely, the establishment of government universities where students can receive a general education, combined with a military education.

These universities should be absolutely free, and should be open to all who in the lower schools of the nation have developed a tendency toward mathematics, engineering and scientific specialization.

To men with this inclination, the technical training of a military course would be of great advantage in their civil career, even if they never entered the army, or never had occasion to be drafted as officers.

But all these men who graduated from such national universities would be available for officers in case the United States ever was compelled to war. In fact, THEIR FREE EDUCATION SHOULD BE ON THAT BASIS AND WITH THAT UNDERSTANDING.

A certain number of these graduates who elected to go into the army could do so, and the rest would distribute themselves through out the citizenship, engaging in the occupations of peace, in scientific work, in surveying, engineering, and all such analogous pursuits, doubly fitted and fortified for such pursuits by the general education and the technical training they had received at the national universities.

These national universities should be established in various parts of the country. There should be, as now, a new naval university at Annapolis, of course; another one at New Orleans, another one in New England, one on the Great Lakes, and one on the Pacific Coast.

There should be another series of national universities for military technical training, instead of naval, one at West Point, one in the Middle Northwest, at Chicago, St. Paul; one in the Middle Southwest, at Atlanta, St. Louis; one at some such Western city as Denver, and one on the Pacific Coast.

The whole country would then be fairly well covered with national universities, adding to the education of the citizenship and giving each student, in addition, a military or naval technical training and scientific education, which, as stated above, would not only fit him for service to his country in time of war, but would prove of special advantage to him in any technical scientific occupation of civil life.

If these universities were generally established, as above outlined, and if the public schools of the country gave the pupils in attendance military exercises, which are so good for the development of the body, so enjoyable as well as beneficial to boys and young men, we would have a citizenry soundly trained in the fundamentals of military efficiency, and so trained that their training would be of advantage to them in their daily life and civil occupation, in strength of body and power of mind, even if they were never called upon to employ this training in war.

With such a military foundation secured at the schools, there would be no necessity for any overwhelming standing army, or any general military system more exacting than the Swiss system, which provides a formidable and efficient military force without interfering with the civil life of the citizens.

When one of the greatest German generals was asked why France was not invaded through Switzerland, instead of through Belgium, he replied, "Because Switzerland has half a million of the most efficient soldiers in the world."

In this case, even the advocates of unpreparedness must see that Switzerland's efficient military system did not provoke war, but prevented war. It protected the country, even without a war, because the Germans realized what the opposition of Switzerland's 500,000 physically well-developed, intelligent and well-trained and well-officered soldiers would mean.

If the United States had a citizen soldiery proportionately as numerous and well-trained as those of Switzerland no nation in the world would ever think of attacking us.

The answer that any general would give to anyone who would ask him why he did not attack the United States would be:

"Because the United States has an army in civil life, but capable of being mobilized for immediate action, of ten million of the finest soldiers in the world;

"The finest soldiers because they are the finest specimens of physical manhood, having been perfected physically in the military exercises of the public schools;

"The finest soldiers, because they are active and alert mentally, having been educated in the public schools in all branches of practical education, and with a sufficient knowledge of the requirements of military efficiency;

"The finest soldiers in the world, because they could be capably officered by men who stand in the front ranks of the various scientific and engineering occupations of America, and who have been prepared for those leading positions by the great national universities of America, which give their graduates a technical military education as well as the general scientific education necessary for success in civil life."

Such an answer would be sufficient to deter any would-be conqueror of this country, and such a system, which would fit the youth of the country physically and mentally for success in civil life, as well as for military efficiency in case of need, is the proper system for this great peace-loving republic.

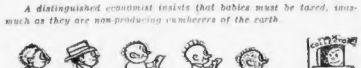
More Tax Dodgers

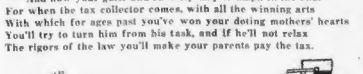
A distinguished economist insists that babies must be taxed, inasmuch as they are non-producing cumberers of the earth.



OHO! you idle wasters, you who neither toil nor spin,
Who take no thought of whither leads the way you wander in,
But laugh and lark and take your ease, with not a grief nor care,
While others stagger 'neath the load that should be yours to bear.
The debt you owe society at last has fallen due
And pretty soon we're going to lay a thumping tax on you.

A TAX on every baby, fat and thin, and large and small,
Who costs so much for food and clothes, but never works at all;
A tax on all the dimpled mites who, from their time of birth,
Have been a worthless leisure class—all cumberers of earth.
Your happy days as household pets will all too soon be past,
And you, like all of us, will have to pay your share at last.

AND yet we know the depths of craft to which you can descend
And how your guile and subtlety may triumph in the end.
For when the tax collector comes, with all the winning arts
With which for ages past you've won your doting mothers' hearts
You'll try to turn him from his task, and if he'll not relax
The rigors of the law you'll make your parents pay the tax.



Justifiable Caution

Grahame-White has denied the rumor that he has been shot as a British spy by the Germans, but he was very careful not to deny the other rumor that he has been shot as a German spy by the British.

A Gleam of Hope

After the pomp and splendor of Shadow Lawn perhaps the President will not want to return to the severe simplicity of the White House.

Something of a Difficulty

A lot of pork barrel Congressmen will want those new battleships built in Iowa and Kansas and Nebraska.

Eat, Drink and Be Sanitary, for Tomorrow——

The death cells in New York's Sing Sing prison have been made sanitary. Which reminds one of Punch's picture of two Irish tenants waiting on a fence to shoot the landlord as he came home. The landlord was belated and one of the tenants, looking cautiously up the road, said: "I hope nothin's happened to the poor fellow."

America Still in the Lead

Famine prices of food in Berlin are now quoted. They show that, if this war continues ten or fifteen years longer, meat will cost as much in Berlin as it does in Boston.

As to Envy

"I envy no man's garden
If he'll let me have a rose."
—John Kendrick Bangs.

I like these cheerful ditties, John,
That you so blithely sing;
I quite agree that envy
Don't get you anything.
I envy no man's melon patch,
Unless he's gone and fenced it,
I envy no man's bank roll
If he'll let me check against it.

I would not envy Morgan
If I could have his yacht,
Or even Rockefeller
If I had all he's got,
And as for my rich neighbor,
I'd even go so far
As not to envy his garage
If I could have his car.
If I had everything I want
I'd sit around and smile,
For after all this envy stuff
Is really not worth while.

Why Is Mr. McCall Silent on the Taxation Question?

GOVERNOR WALSH has asked Mr. McCall several times to state his position on the taxation question. So far Mr. McCall's silence has been very painful.

The taxation question in Massachusetts has reached an acute stage. There is pending an amendment to the constitution which will allow the Legislature to discriminate against the owners of real estate and other property which cannot be concealed. This amendment may be proper enough provided that we have an honest Legislature and a courageous Governor who will stand out against the organized conspiracy of tax dodgers in this State to take advantage of the passage of this amendment to obtain just such a discrimination.

It is well known to everybody who follows affairs at the State House that there is a full intention on the part of a strong organization of tax dodgers to tax stocks and bonds in Massachusetts at the rate of three dollars on a thousand while they tax real estate, a man's house and machinery and horses and teams and other property which cannot be concealed, at the rate of seventeen dollars on a thousand. Not only is this the plan, but it is also planned not to provide any adequate means of compelling a full disclosure of the intangible property like stocks and bonds now being concealed.

Consider what it would mean to the real estate owner and the owner of tangible property if he is not only discriminated against in the rate of taxation, but if the holders of stocks and bonds are allowed in addition to a lower rate to continue the concealment of their property. It is important for the people of Massachusetts to know what Mr. McCall's attitude is on this question, for the Governor this coming year will have to pass upon it.

Governor Walsh has made his position clear and explicit. He will not tolerate any change in the law which does not compel every man to make known the amount of the property which he possesses in order that he may bear his fair share of the taxes.

Why is Mr. McCall so silent on this most important question?

Mr. Shaw's Charges Require an Answer

CAN the charge be true which Mr. Shaw, the Prohibition candidate for Governor, makes against Mr. McCall and the men behind him, that they are threatening to prevent contributions to the Christian Endeavor Societies unless the members of the Christian Endeavor Societies, surrendering their birth-right to vote as they please, cease to support Mr. Shaw and Prohibition?

It is unbelievable that a sensible man like Mr. McCall could descend to such tactics. Even if it were possible for men to be mean enough, it seems scarcely possible that they would be fools enough to do such things.

On the other hand, Mr. Shaw is a very able, careful, earnest, conscientious man who would not deliberately make a misstatement and who would not make a statement of such importance without making it deliberately. The Republican financial backers of Mr. McCall ought to make some explanation immediately.

The Lake of Sleep

By Jane McLean

WILD poppies fringe its hem and floating wide
Upon its surface lotus blossoms dream,
And blowing river grasses shivering hide,
With shadowy traceries, the faintest gleam.

Down the mountain side there is a path
Stony and rough where pilgrims seek the way,
Stumbling and faint, toward that fair aftermath
That flucks with cool the desert of the day.

Rain's white cool fingers and her silver throat
Lead perilously near the magic lake,
Till with her last faint laughter-echoed note,
A tuneful cheat, she leaves you wide awake.

But I have dreamed and dreaming found a way,
A path of dreams unfortified but steep,
Where fewer mortals ever fear to stray,
Lest they may never reach the lake of sleep.
